You can use different drivers, but there is almost never a drop-in replacement part that gives the same results. That doesn't necessarily mean the replacement part you choose is of lesser quality, it could be much better and still not give the same results. The reason is each model driver has different characteristics that interact together with the other parts in the system. So the bottom line is unless you are prepared to do some design work, it is probably better that you stick with stock replacement parts.
