Subject: Re: Suggestions for FAQ
Posted by Wayne Parham on Fri, 05 Oct 2012 21:46:03 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

zheka wrote on Fri, 05 October 2012 15:56it's a shame that threads like this one are getting lost over time. Is there a way to make it a sticky?
There is a way to make threads sticky, yes. And sometimes I think about doing it. But really, there are probably a couple dozen that I refer to over and over again, and if I made them all sticky, the whole first page would be covered with them. Maybe I could make one FAQ page sticky basshorn subwoofer - the best yet!", "Midrange Horn" and "Speaker placement and wavefront launch".

As it is, I just reference previous posts when I make replies that pertain. Like if someone asks how to make measurements when designing a crossover, I usually link to "The Acoustic Center: How it applies to Loudspeaker Measurements", "Crossover optimization for DI-matched two-way speakers" or to "Notes for the DIYer", which contains a link to that thread and to other crossover information.

I guess when it comes right down to it, I end up thinking half the threads on this site would end up being a sticky. Maybe not that many, but a lot. So I just leave it the way it is, and hope people will use the search function to mine the site for useful nuggets of information.