Hi, I am beginning to hate those companies that send you a gizmo and tell you the instruction on how to make it work are on their web site. Do they think everyone carries around a PC or tablet when they are trying to make something else work? Arggg! Worse when you try the site it is down for maintenance. I also think that more products could be intuitive in how they work. If I need a book to figure out how to make it do its job then I probably don't need the thing in the first place.
