Subject: Visual Symmetry vs Sound

I have a friend who just moved. In her new house, they set up the TV and speakers in a narrow area. Unfortunately, they can do one of two things in this space; center the TV and speakers so they are symmetric to the couch (which can't be moved due to a second couch) and off-center on the wall or set them up so they look centered on the wall but then are off-center relative to the couch.

I told them they were being too inflexible in their living room arrangement and if something had to give, it should be the visual effect and not the sound, but they didn't listen to me.
