It has been a month and a day and the PC is finally back up and running. Gads what a trial. It didn't stop with the second new mother board either. Some of the software said I had used up my number of installs and should buy more copies. BS. I finally got through to them and said I would send the drive the old copy was on with detailed instructions on how to use it . They all ultimately relented and allowed another install. Greedy buggers. Anyhow the new configuration has been running fine for 14 hours straight. I actually like the new board. Its an Asrock with a 6 core AMD cpu. I have yet to try the over clocking functions as it permits everything to be OC. The cpu is unlocked as well. I wonder if the warranty covers it should I fry something.
