Subject: A little At A Time
Posted by Nouri on Wed, 27 Apr 2016 07:30:11 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

When I was a teenager, I knew an older guy who would constantly be upgrading the system he had. He had a really good set up during the time I knew him, and I asked him how well he could afford such an expensive hobby. He told me that it wasn't that expensive to him because he didn't buy it all at once. It was an ongoing project that was years in the making because because he would do a little bit at a time. 20 bucks here....40 bucks there. If wanted new speakers for instance, he would list every component that goes into a speaker, from the woofers to the cloth that protects it all, and buy just what he can afford as he can afford it.

Looking back I can see how that is a good way of getting the best audio system for your dollar. Parts are constantly being upgraded and you tend to see that more if you are constantly looking for parts and components.