

---

Subject: Re: Tubey Amps?

Posted by Manualblock on Fri, 01 Oct 2004 23:50:04 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

Well you could use an output transformer that saturates easily, then some carbon comp resistors and those old paper and wax capacitors, find a poorly constructed transformer that is unable to swing full output at high frequencies, that should do it. Since the vacuume tube triode is still the most linear amplifying device made you would have to compensate for that with old inferior components to get that "bloom".

---