Subject: Re: Cheap Gear
Posted by Leot55 on Sat, 26 Aug 2017 14:50:21 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I think it's sensible to buy an inexpensive starter instrument when you're first learning. You can always sell it later and upgrade to a better version once you know it's something you want to stick with. But, I can also see the point of spending more upfront for better quality. I bet you might luck out if you buy a used instrument that's made by a trustworthy company known for making durable instruments.