Subject: Re: Cheap Gear
Posted by moss24 on Sun, 27 Aug 2017 06:33:45 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Leot55 wrote on Sat, 26 August 2017 09:50I think it's sensible to buy an inexpensive starter instrument when you're first learning. You can always sell it later and upgrade to a better version once you know it's something you want to stick with. But, I can also see the point of spending more upfront for better quality. I bet you might luck out if you buy a used instrument that's made by a trustworthy company known for making durable instruments.
Quite so Leot. On the other hand, it can also be worth it to (perhaps) hire an instrument or go for classes where there are a variety of good quality instruments. You can then purchase an instrument of choice, once your mind is made up.