I just read this article, The Case Against Subwoofers for Music. I think the writer makes some valid points. I've always had difficulty getting the right balance between my subwoofer and speakers. It's not impossible, but it's challenging. I also have to agree that too much bass can easily muddy up a song. I rarely feel the need to get the bass to really boom these days (although I used to love it in the past). So for me, I don't think they're really worth it, so long as I have good enough speakers. What do you all think?
