Thanks Wayne for your insight. I was really leaning a little more towards feedback about the Continental Capacitor oil caps for power supply filtering than anything. As with anything in this world, there is no absolute, especially since everyone has different perspectives based on their personal taste, experience and perceptions. I guess I will have to go straight to the manufacturer of the oil capacitors for information. I have tried many of the boutique capacitors for coupling and have found some differences in their sonic impact of the circuit where implemented. But, some people claim that there is no sonic difference between coupling capacitors of similar construction and materials used. Go figure! Norris
