Hi, I suspect it is a combination of economics and availability of free band space. I doubt that any company would try to create a new form of radio at the moment as it would cost a fortune.

Besides it would need to do something better than what exists now and convince lots of buyers to purchase the gear to listen to it. With AM, FM, Satellite for mobiles and where available via WIFI high resolution downloads...I see no need. Someone could possibly do something over the web that used existing gear and only needed software to use... still a long shot. For over the air...bands are generally not available. Buying space on one would be hugely costly (just ask the cell phone providers). Public service bands would not have the coverage desired either.
