:lol: I'm laughing at this subject in solidarity with you!

I've done do so very many projects over the years. Most of my favorite things are things that I've made, and many of them are things that I've designed as well.

So my life is filled with equipment that represents hundreds of man-hours of design, development, prototyping, testing and refinement labor in addition to the costs of the parts.

I know you guys share the same experience.

Anyway, I find that I like to spend a good amount of time perfecting a design, and then making devices from it or having them made. I like to setup a system and just enjoy it, without tinkering with it. I like being done.
