Subject: DAW less complicated than Reaper?

My trial subscription to Reaper is about to run out and unfortunately I didn't get a good feel for it. It's sold at a fantastic price, but it's complicated to learn and not at all intuitive in my opinion. In the past I've used Garage Band, but I'd like to find a DAW with more features. Logically, the next step up is to move into Logic Pro X, but it comes with a hefty price tag and there's no demo option to see if I like it. Have you found a DAW that's simple to use - meaning that a person can quickly get started without reading a novel long manual or watching multiple YouTube videos? If you use Logic Pro X do you believe it's worth the money? I can't believe they don't offer a free trial.
