After reading about the debacle of a smart tv owner being inundated with smart ads downloading into and plaguing his viewing experience. I'm wary of any technology that includes smart technology now in its advertised virtues. I agree the audio home theater experience can be compromised greatly with poor systems. Just like the stereo experience. But I think the implied smart technology is no panacea for quality. I think home theater audio is now well established. And there's a great deal of choices and pricing that near anyone can put together a decent system. Wired and wireless.
