Everything about the game was different back then. For example, it was easy to dominate for 5 or 6 years because good players stuck around. Free agency wasn't a thing and there was more a sense of family within the team.

But New England seems to be an exception to that. It's gotten monotonous to see them in the super bowl or in the running year in, year out.

Of the professional sports. Football for me should give the most money for their players. Their lifespan on average is so short to the other sports. It's all too rich for my wallet.
