A year or so ago, though, I remember reading somewhere that audio and video equipment sold during this time is created specifically for Black Friday shoppers and was subpar. Is that still true - or I should say - if that was true, is it still true today? Are some things safer bets than others? Like name brand headphones are likely the same, but television sets are likely to be a different model/quality from what you'd usually find? Are you planning to shop for audio/video equipment on Black Friday?
