Do you think the genre of the music you're listening to affects your perception of how good the audio itself sounds? Like, you listen to pop music from the '70's where the songs are about simple, country living, then you listen to the current brand of pop with synthesized beats, all electronic based "music" and rhythms. Two very different sounds to be sure, but do you think the former sounds better on an older system simply because of what the genre and topic is? Do you think the latter would sound bad on the same type of system?
