I enjoy very much seeing Ukrainians blowing up Russian tanks. I admire their spirit and tenacity defending their homeland. The Russian leader without hindsight miscalculated this response from Ukraine and the western NATO alliance. But history can show more than one side of any story. David Harvey, an Anthropologist with great insight of economics and history gives a good idea of what the collapse of the USSR in the early 90's, the west's opportunistic financial economic intervention there and the subsequent build up of NATO has had with what's happening now in Ukraine. And as usual, short sightedness can be revealed with history lessons. Which to no end is in the misjudgment of our own economic history.
