Yes, you're right, all websites have to be kept somewhere, and as a rule, these days every organization has to have its own website to provide information about itself, to get feedback from the web. Even many ordinary people create websites and blogs and make money from them. That is, every day there are more and more new projects and information on the web in any field of activity. And all of this is stored, as mentioned above, on hosting, more details about hosting and servers can be read in the full guide https://websitehosting.com/guide/.
