Subject: Stripping dye off keyboard

Long story short, my daughter got hair dye all over her keyboard. I've worked on it enough that the keys are no longer sticking. I've dissembled it as much as possible and there's some dye inside, not much, but it's there. How do I remove this layer of dye without wrecking the keyboard? Is it even possible?

I know I haven't been on here in a while, but that's because I've been busy with my new job. Since the kids are older, I've finally able to go back to full time-employment. I hate to pop on just because I've got an issue, but I'm desperate, and I know you guys know your stuff.
