I remember a time when it felt absolutely magical to have my favorite song come on the radio. I'd turn the volume up and jam out. I also remember rushing home from school to watch Carson Daly on MTV's TRL to see if the band I loved finally broke into the top 5. It's just so different today, when I have immediate access to all those things and more whenever I'd like. I don't think I appreciate music or musicians like I used to because it's all so instantaneously accessible. What about you all? Has instant access affected the way that you experience music and performers?
