My investigation of Linus has been fairly extensive. The Lindows package sold with computers at Walmart has several packages installed and there is a subscription package available to get more. For a 'front end' approach to use Linux for a minimal install to do mail, websearch and some office apps., I haven't heard about anything better than Xandros. Xandros was written up in the last PC Upgrade magazine as a press release than evaluation, but that's the way I heard about it. Plain vanilla Xandros costs about $40. More on Linux in these other messages...
