Very interesting dialogue with Jeffrey Sachs and a Chinese born Australian living academic on her book, Chinese Statecraft in a Changing World. Jean Dong, (careful with that last name), explains how China over its 2000 year old history with its geographical nature and surrounding borders with many countries has shaped its political philosophy and current economic history that countries such as ours, the US, has interpreted as being aggressive and threatening. But her analysis shows that the Chinese have a more pragmatic and thoughtful view than dominance and imperial conquest. Really interesting insight to current world affairs that China now is leading by example and with long term strategy. And not ominous at all.
