If I could tap my feet together three times like Dorothy of the Wizard of Oz and make a wish that people would at least try to entertain alternative thoughts. It would start with them first by reading just this dialogue from a fine blog/podcast done by Nima Alkhorshid. He's a civil engineer from Cyprus originally. His blog is Dialogue Works. He's also interested in what goes on in the world. We all should. You don't get this kind of information from corporate media.

Two greats sum up the debate of Harris & Trump. What it amounted to was like a half glass of beer left out in the sun for several hours. Flat, stale, no fizz and smelly.

But it illustrates what the state of our political class is at. Anemic and in deep denial and constrained by ideology and monetary pledges to the challenges of the state of our nation and our world.
It really makes one ponder how anyone could get so worked up with the personalities that encompass our body politics. They're really unimaginative and trivial and yet, so dangerous.
We need a helluva lot more wishes Dorothy.
