This article from Aljazeera speaks volumes for what our China policy is truly all about. It's sour grapes. Our whiny corporate monopolists aren't getting their cake and ice cream in the huge serving they used to when China was developing they're industry and manufacturing with very cheap labor.

Which goes to show that a strong government that has the principles of their people's welfare in mind over the enrichment of a few of them that bribe politicians for personal gain is a superior method of governance. Over time with social welfare for their people, the Chinese have been able to actually increase the personal incomes of their workforce while becoming even more productive. Keeping the cost of living well within what constitutes a middle class way of life for millions of Chinese working class.

Our cost of living through monopolization and privatization has risen so high that even with wage increases several times what Chinese make still can't cope with the rising tide of inflation. The idiot tariffs will start kicking in soon to further erode working people being able to "cope".

But our elitist few aren't happy so they whine to the political hacks to do something already. So, what is our method of modus operandi? Antagonism, threats, tariffs, saber rattling, subversion and anything but cooperation. You get more bees with honey. Our brain trust is too arrogant to figure that one.
