I can remember doing well in my first job, but when it came to being sacked, I wasn't told clearly what I did wrong. Since that incident, I don't do anything to impress anyone more than I should because I know it may end up one way or another.

It is not like I am asking you to totally change what you believe in, but trust me when I say that we have a lot to contribute on what is going to be. We can focus on making our lives and that of those around us better once we do good. We can enjoy good things of life once we work harder. So, relaxing and believing in what will be doesn't sound good with me.
