Piano or keyboard was also my favourite instrument and it became easy because I already had the passion to master it.
I learnt how to beat the drums from a music academy. My brother is a guitarist and asked me to always follow him when he went to practice in 2020. That was the year that I took an interest in learning how to beat the drum. Since then, I have become very good when it comes to playing it which makes me happy.
I love how your brother being a guitarist ended up inspiring you without even planning it. And the spark you have as someone that's ready for a new skill shows that you really wanted it too. I remembered how And 2020 was, it affected many people but it sounds like you turned it into something really meaningful.

Learning drums isn’t easy at all so the fact that you stuck with it and actually got something good to be proud of is the more reason that you need to be happy. I love drumming but I can't play one for myself.
