Music for babies still in the womb is like a Ray of sunshine for their little souls. I've heard some reports that babies in the womb can respond to music from week 16 and there is nothing wrong with playing songs from that stage.

The best pick here for babies still in the womb is lullabies. I am talking about traditional nursery rhymes like the "twinkle, twinkle, little star" kinda songs. Those are calm, but pretty good for babies still in the womb.

You can always search for similar songs such as the one that I mentioned and play them for the kids whenever you feel like. Another interesting option is singing for your baby! I've seen some pregnant women do it when I went to the hospital for my quarterly checkups and it is always a pleasure to watch that happen.
