Subject: What do you make of AI-assisted drum machines?

I've been making music for more than 4 years now and the thing is that I have followed the AI wave over a period and how it assists in some music production.

Right now, the one that I am thinking about is AI-assisted drums. I've heard about tools such as Drumnet and AIVA and how they can help in making music.

Some of my friends in the neighbourhood talk about these tools and it has increased my curiosity to the point that I am planning to get one this year. Do you think these tools help producers make great songs in general or is it just a lazy shortcuts that flatten originality? Do songs made with such tools have that creativity part that we all desire or not?

What do you think about it? Do you make use of these AI drums in your studios? Can you say it's worth the investment?
