Becky wrote on Fri, 05 December 2025 23:14The thing is I've saved up some money for Christmas and have been making use of just my TV speakers for some years now. I've never bothered about getting a soundbar for my room until I visited my friend last week. She has a soundbar setup and simply by watching a movie in her place, the difference is mindblowing. I can clearly hear everything that is said in the movie and the fighting scenes didn't sound dull and confusing.

Since I got back, I have been thinking of getting a soundbar with the money that I have now. Currently, I've been researching LG soundbars since I have an LG TV in the living room and some people said getting an LG soundbar works better with their TV. I don't know how true it is or it was used as a marketing technique.

I've got a living room that is around 13 X 16, which I think is the standard and when I am free, I mostly watch sports and TV shows on the TV and won't mind having a good sound level when I watch those TV shows and movies.

I have around 400$ budgeted for this and won't mind spending more if what I am getting is what the amount. Any ideas on which soundbar to get?
Hey, dear

I don't know if you've finally gotten a TV with the money? Which one did you finally go for? How has it been so far because I've got plans to get a new TV for my office soon.
