This is the exact reason I have not been convinced to own a smart TV because I can't deal with having electronics that I can't attempt to repair when anything goes wrong.

The LG TV that I used to watching movies and also playing games when I have the opportunity have gone bad a couple of times, and I had to repair it with some quick tips from YouTube videos. The local store where I got it have sent couple of mails advertising their smart TVs, but with what I've read about how difficult it is to repair one once it goes bad, I don't see myself taking such risk.
