Subject: Re: Can Music Change the World?
Posted by Hank on Fri, 10 Apr 2026 06:44:03 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Helen wrote on Sat, 29 November 2025 14:37Music has a way of reaching people and almost all of us know that. If it's a powerful song, it can sneak right into our emotions, stay there and also turn into a message to us.

In my family, a good song can shift a mood, get everyone thinking especially that late evening when we are all together as one.

I think the reason why organisations use artists to drive their messages is that they know that when a message is wrapped in melody, people tend to remember it and also act towards it. I believed that songs have the power to push a society forward.
Music is life and over a period, we've seen musicans use songs to make a lot of societal changes in the world. Songs did for revolution and the ones done for peace. It is always clear that the world is being heavily affected by songs.