I get that feeling that comes with trying to get kits from some of those kit sites on the internet. It can be a frustrating experience if you are starting new because there would be lots of choices that you will struggle with picking one.

There are ways that I get the kits that I need. One of it is by driving around during weekends and looking to see if kit shops around have the stuff that I need.

The other one is scanning popular sites online for what I desire.

Pi Speakers is a section on this community where you can get nice designs when you want to build speakers. Oddwatt is my favourite when it comes to checking out tube amps, for example, while I use Parts Express sometimes when I want to get quality speakers kits.

There are still many more out there, but I bet you will make the right choices checking the few ones that I just mentioned. Wish you all the best on that, mate.
