I don't know if we are many, but I always get genuinely excited by tall DIY speakers. In fact, I will pay for such speakers without hesitation than going for the shiny company made speakers. I don't enjoy having short speaker, earbuds and all of those tiny sound gears... I go for the tall ones.

One of the reasons that I like those DIY tall speakers is that it feels personal since people who make it at their shops must be passionate audiophiles who know what a good speaker should look like.

Have you had the experience of having a pair of tall DIY speakers that made you believe they are better than the commercial ones? What was unique about that made it fall in love with the pairs? Or do you always buy commercially made ones?
