Subject: Do you really need a dedicated subwoofer for a small living room?

In most cases, subwoofers are used in large home theater rooms, but I have been wondering how good it can be in smaller ones? I know that even a compact room can benefit from a better low frequency reproduction, even though I know volume settings are of great importance if one wishes to achieve that.

We have lots of options like products from SVS and other producers that can fit into this, but the major worry of many is whether these subwoofers would disturb the neighbours around. So, I would like to know how you guys handle bass management in smaller places. Do you make use of more than one subwoofer? How do you position them in order to get what you want?

Do you have subwoofers that you can recommend for one who plans to use it in a small room? What are the best ways to get the bass under control without losing the impact?
