Anyone see the photo's of the Cream show? Gee, I don't remmember Ginger Baker using a walker..Someone wrote that they lost steam on some of the longer songs, what a surprise, Jack Bruce looked stressed; he wasn't singing White Room he was asking for the Bathroom.

MB,My computer's been down -- sorry I didn't respond to your Spirit post.Between Spirit and Cream, Cream was my cup of tea. Jeez, I remember when all of a sudden I became aware in Ninth Grade there was all this amazing music coming out almost daily -- Cream, Jimi, Janis. I was like a kid in candy store. I still have all those albums, I'm happy to say.Where/when was the Cream show? I didn't hear about it. Ginger Baker in a walker? Frankly, that's better than I expected -- he looked half dead thirty years ago. Just last week I was playing my Blind Faith album (the one with the barely pubescent girl on the cover -- how did they get away with that?).

Cream played the night before last. Ginger baker wasn't really in a walker but the journalists claimed they looked real old; christ he's 65!Allison Steele right, late night new music everyweek. Remmember the day Tommy was released? WNEW played the whole album through non-stop. Those were the days. I almost understand how the roaring twenties and flappers felt when the war killed the music.Love the Bathous; I see bats behind my house every night, I should build one.

There was, however, a dark side to that era: as far as I could tell, every girl played only three albums, and they were ALL by Joni Mitchell.

Your scaring me now! I had to run back to get some Prozac. I had a flashback to "Candles In The Rain".

It's been covered! Sort of a funky version.

mb,I don't have the foggiest idea who she is. I just couldn't believe that ANYONE would cover "Lay Down (Candles in the Rain)". Meredith Brooks must not be totally unknown: somehow she roped Queen Latifah into backing her on the song. I think that's QL chanting "C'mon . . . lay it down now" in the background.e
