
Subject: Dyson

Posted by Manualblock on Mon, 31 Oct 2005 01:45:01 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

While waiting for the CD I have been listening to some of the examples of his speeches on the net. Very interesting; lacking the usual tone and stridency of many of the contemporaries. Off topic but Gregory Corso passed away last week. A true primer for the beats and a great street poet. That got me thinking about the beat influence on culture and how the renaissance is due. "There is no tell throughout, The ages, That a messenger-spirit, Ever stumbled into darkness." Gregory Corso

Subject: Re: Dyson

Posted by lon on Mon, 31 Oct 2005 03:01:40 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Should be there Mon- Tue. I recall Corso as one of the City Lights Poets alongwith Ferlinghetti and some other stuff I forgot. The only poem I remember by him was called "Bald" the first line of which was: "My hair is dead!" As to the renaissance, I've been waiting for that my whole life. Just recently I was talking with someone about revolution poets. I thought of and mentioned The Last Poets who, as a group, were a major influence on early rap music and are referred to by name on the "Thank you" section of one of the Public Enemy albums by Dr. Dre. I was surprised to find it is available on cd and so, after a mail to the request line at the public library, they now own a copy of "When The Revolution Comes" "This is Madness" and the other items on the first Last Poets. As to the Beats, the best Beat for me was and is Ken Nordine--famous for his Word Jazz recitations and recordings first heard on Chicago radio. Nordine who is a radio personality was more famous for being the voice of Folger's Coffee. But his recording techniques have been widely copied by the advertising business for radio. If you heard the originals you would know and recognize these techniques immediately. Oh yeah, and Stan Freberg. Stan Freberg saw the inherent humor in the over-seriousness of the Beat Movement and made fun of it mercilessly. I guess if, as Kerouac said, that Beat meant worn out and worn down as in 'beat up', then Freberg in his humor was the anti-beat, the Upbeat. lon
Ken Nordine stuff

Subject: Re: Dyson

Posted by Manualblock on Tue, 01 Nov 2005 13:18:05 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Received the Dyson speech; thanks much Lon; very kind of you. Why do the Last Poets seek to distance themselves from Gil-Scott Heron? Many of their lyrics are interchangeable; since they appear at the same time period it seems to be a puzzle. Can you extrapolate the meaning of a movement from the perspective of history? I know definitely in terms of music which is the reason for this forum that the importance and effect of music on our day to day is nowhere near what it was in the late 60's and 70's. It had a different meaning then than it does now. Read Damir's musical commentaries and you can see what I mean; the importance music held to him and his contemporaries over there as a soundtrack to change. What do you think of Kerouac?

Subject: Re: Dyson

Posted by lon on Tue, 01 Nov 2005 18:46:48 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

As a literary historian I'm not much. The Last Poets and Gill Scott Heron are, I imagine studied in Black studies courses along with Nzake Shange, Angela Davis etc. etc. Best joke I've heard over the past few years is one phrase: "Colin Powell-- The Other White Meat." As the educated or middle class has become integrated, whatever movement there was is significantly diluted. Most recently, the work of Malik Raheem in New Orleans shows what long term activism is about: community building and infrastructure in the form of clinics and other services. Angela Davis is a professor some place. So is Ishmael Reed. But it takes someone like Dyson who is a "power talker" in the sense of old line pre-television smooth politicians who gives an actual boot on the ground message to those of us in the under class. And, I count myself as one of them. Everything I know about Jack Kerouac I learned from Steve Allen. Steve Allen made a documentary about him. What is more interesting to me is the fact that John Cassavetes old tv show called Johnny Staccato has been recently made into a film festival. I don't know if dvd production of that will take place, but it's certainly more significant than The Dick Van Dyke Show. I think this thread is about nostalgia. I really have no nostalgia for 'the good old days.' But in those old days there are a few things worth remembering which I call my "personal oral history." I mainly talk about that. If I recall correctly, "This Is Madness" was the last composition by the Last Poets as a group. "This Is Madness" was about bad drug trips. That just about says it all.

Subject: Re: Dyson

Posted by Manualblock on Wed, 02 Nov 2005 00:55:10 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

"Everything Old is New again!", did Cole Porter write that? Nostalgia is a word fraught with meaning. For those who see all things as progressing in a linear fashion from point a to the dirt nap then it takes on a grim connotation. Do people really hold their world view in such a prescriptive manner? I wonder. Gil-Scott Heron makes great music and writes beautiful songs; what has that to do with nostalgia? And Kerouac can suck you in emotionally like all true writing should so that serves a modern purpose. I never put on rose glasses; but those things that were good didn't get bad over time. They bridge the things we do with experience; not always remembered correctly but then nothing has the exact reality for each of us and neither does the passing of time. I hope this doesn't sound confrontational because it isn't but as an older guy these things have a immediacy that demands attention.I think also the current lack of valuable musical and written art available forces us to examine the best of all that we have at hand.And what is shared events but the evolving of culture.I believe that music had a more connected effect back in the day and I also think it will as everything does resume that function.Why If I may ask are you a member of the underclass?

Subject: Re: Dyson

Posted by lon on Wed, 02 Nov 2005 04:53:28 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Everything Old is New again!", did Cole Porter wright that? --> No I don't think so. He said Anything Goes.Nostalgia is a word fraught with meaning. For those who see all things as progressing in a linear fashion from point a to the dirt nap then it takes on a grim connotation.Do people really hold their world view in such a prescriptive manner? I wonder. --> I know this is rhetorical above but I'm of the mind that the good old days that everyone 'remembers' including the tv producers of That 70's Show or the whatits-- blended family that I never watched-- have a view of that time that I don't share. The good old days then and I'd venture to say now as well largely depend on your position in society.Gil-Scott Heron makes great music and writes beautiful songs; what has that to do with nostalgia? And Kerouac can suck you in emotionally like all true writing should so that serves a modern purpose. --> In point of fact, GSH hardly sang at all but talked poetry.I never put on rose glasses; but those things that were good didn't get bad over time. They bridge the things we do with experience; not always remmembered correctly but then nothing has the exact reality for each of us and niether does the passing of time.I hope this doesn't sound confrontational because it isn't but as an older guy these things have a immediacy that demands attention. --> What things? I'm an old fart too.I think also the current lack of valuable musical and written art available forces us to examine the best of all that we have at hand.And what is shared events but the evolving of culture. --> There's always new art. I'll venture to say neither of us have heard any of the good stuff. We are not current with it. One of the great experiences of my life as an 18 year old was seeing Julian Beck's Living Theatre live on a college campus in Appleton Wisconsin. I was in the right place at the right time.I believe that music had a more connected effect back in the day and I also think it will as everything does resume that function. --> Until then people will keep on going ooblah dee ooblah dah with their old Beatles records.Why If I may ask are you a member of the underclass? --> No comment.

Subject: Re: Dyson

Posted by Manualblock on Wed, 02 Nov 2005 12:53:11 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Lon; my friend. How does all the points we make about music and art reduce to the Beatles?? Were there no other musical styles or artists available back then. What about Jazz?GSH; I'm a fan and as such know of many songs he actually sung; here's one that's gorgeous; "Rivers Of My Fathers." Another "Lady Day And John Coltrane." I am sorry if I overstepped with the underclass question; I can't figure if you are being rhetorical. Television shows prior to the Reagan repeal of the Broadcast Standards Act were better because they were limited by law to no more than a small amount of commercial airtime per hour. That's why in re-runs or on DVD the older shows last longer and have a more complete story line than everything that came after Reagan. Now it's all commercials and they can't get a narrative flow going; that's why all the new major network shows suck. We both make attempts to find the new and good in art so where the heck is it? I can write a very long essay about what was better or different about the years from 1965-1980. I'll spare that but I do believe there was a more coherent culture that assessed value and worth that we don't see today. A friend who graduated from City College back when it was considered a great school says this: "When I sat in the graduation commencement ceremony back then there were five Summa Cum Laude awards. I attended a ceremony there recently; same number of students, 30 or more Summa's. What the hell are these people doing, it can't be that everyone got much smarter."

Subject: Grade inflation-- Re: Dyson
Posted by lon on Wed, 02 Nov 2005 17:55:30 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I think our narrative has started to ramble. Maybe it's best pursued in mail. Yes, the phenomenon of grade inflation is well known and percolates down to the high school level where there have been as many as 38 valedictorians at one school graduation. In the era of children being raised on Mr. Rogers where everyone is special and above average (Prairie Home Companion) parents have been able to leverage and influence teachers. Recently I was told by a retired university professor that at the end of term, the teacher is required to hand out one of those "how am I doing cards" with the numbers 1 (poor) through 5 (great!) which are reviewed by faculty or somebody. So the teachers have had to become pleasers. On this whole subject of everyone being special and exceptional there is an excellent book which all Americans should read called "Mediated" by Thomas DeZengotita. The author writes for Harpers and has published this book on what he calls the portrayal of the individual as one of flattering representation. It's narcissism by another name and it has affected the national psyche.

Mediated

Subject: Re: Grade inflation-- Re: Dyson
Posted by Manualblock on Wed, 02 Nov 2005 19:04:41 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I'm familiar with the Harper's articles and agree 100%. This subject affects me in a personal way regarding my son in private high school for which I pay dearly to escape that very affliction plaguing the public education sector. I have attended meetings of parents who are attempting to defuse this insult to individual accomplishment. Which in a roundabout way brings us back to the past and past practices.

Subject: Re: Grade inflation-- Re: Dyson
Posted by lon on Thu, 03 Nov 2005 05:01:55 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

We should get off these subjects and talk about some movies and music. But one note on Harpers: the most recent article they had on education was by Jonathan Kozol on the re-segregation of the school system. Kozol offers this anecdote in that piece: He said, "When I go to the house of some well-to-do acquaintances they look at me cautiously. They think I want to redistribute their wealth. I do."

Subject: Re: Grade inflation-- Re: Dyson
Posted by Manualblock on Thu, 03 Nov 2005 07:32:52 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Yeah I missed that one but I agree. Music and Movies; have you read the posts? Where are they. This is the only thread played out now. I would talk music and movies all day but not to re-play the same one pointed adjectives in one line reviews endlessly repeated.

Subject: Re: Grade inflation-- Re: Dyson
Posted by lon on Thu, 03 Nov 2005 18:59:20 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Ok. back to business.

Subject: Re: Grade inflation-- Re: Dyson
Posted by lon on Thu, 03 Nov 2005 19:59:53 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I am really po'ed. Just did some thoughts (pretty long) on Sin City and my operating system blew up. Linux is always in a state of upgrade. I got through the write up fine, then tried to make a link to IMDb for reference and that's when it hit.

Subject: Sin City

Posted by Wayne Parham on Thu, 03 Nov 2005 21:08:45 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Oh, man, that suuuuucks. I'm doing a port of a huge middleware system (like MQSeries or Unicenter) from Solaris to Linux. So needless to say, I empathize. And I've lost a few of those hour-long dissertation posts too, so I know how frustrating a glitch can be. But wait 'til tomorrow, you'll be ready to do it again. Sin City
