Woah, that's really something! I wonder who this "dreamboy" is? And "geniusturks"? I wonder if they're really Islamic hacker pranksters or if that's a front. Any ideas? These days, it's pretty serious. It's cyber-terrorism. To have a hacker website clearly referenced and identified as the responsible party seems strange to me. Even if in a country that isn't cooperative in legal matters, it still sends up a signal that says "shoot me." It's not like hackers are invulnerable to hacking themselves. Interesting.

Yeah, I didn't go to that site either. That's also why I didn't link to the image or with a text link to that URL. I may visit the website on a junk system and see later though.

The site was down for several days. I was really surprized to see how long they were offline.

What was up with the BassMaxx site? Was it just for fun? Or was there more to it than that?
