By the choice of "Human Events" ("National Conservative Weekly Magazine"), see the link.Well, the political statement is clear and funny - between some books that can be "manifests of evil", or philosophical predecessors of it, our "experts" put Kinsey, feminism and Dewey (about US education, "helped nurture the Clinton generation"). In Top-10 there`s no place for Freud and Darwin, but they were close, maybe next time...

I think that no-one "so-so" normal person (other 3/4) would ever read those shitty books, wrote by abnormals, without any fun or sex or tube amps inside...

I guess I need to throw out my library then. How come no one gets excited about books like Moby Dick and such?Tube amps can be very subversive; talk about"controlling the grid?","DC choke saturation."

Yeah, I know some people eat that sort of thing up, but in this case that's a Landover Baptist (parody) site. - The nonexistant book is part of their summer reading collection for xtian children, which includes "Daddy, Why Did Jesus Kill Grandma"?

The "conservatives," of course, NOT the books!

They are not conservatives; thats the problem. They use the title but truth is they are reactionaries; these neo-cons. A true conservative does not exist in this administration. Lowering taxes while fighting a war and creating huge deficits?? They would shoot you for that in the halls of conservative thinking.

Yes, I remembered the song, "Burn `Em All"...there`s a link...you can read some others, "I hate people", "So What"...etc.The only problem is, A.N.L. was "shitty", 2nd League, 2nd-wave of punk band ("Punks not dead" movement, from the people that `82. discovered that being a punk is cool).Well, to be honest, my (bad) company and I liked them a little, `cos of raw exstremism, around `82-`83.That`s all, folks:-) Damir

I have always thought of myself as a conservative. Anti big government, anti deficit spending, pro education, pro individual rights, pro freedom of religion, pro constitution (including the first amendment). When did it start that the only party subscribing to these values was the Libertarians? I strongly object to these neo-nazis who call themselves "conservatives." When did the Republican Party go sour?How do Christians justify an offensive war on a country based on WMD, when there were none? How do Christians justify an offensive war on a country based on "terrorism," when there were no terrorists in that country? (There ARE NOW!!) How could Christians be so anti-Christ? Does giving lip service to anti-abortion justify their support for a war monger?

Never mind that; how do they justify any killing at all??? Because they are not christians; they are exclusionists and power brokers. It's an exclusive club for the wealthy manipulating the powerless. The shrewd manipulating the ignorant.What I want to know is how do they get a tax break for indulging in political proselytising. The real groundswell organising should be dedicated to pulling the tax break from the religioso's. Tax their property holdings in the billions of dollars and tax it now.
