What was Greenpeace thinking? I'm not sure on what level they thought this was funny. Even the reviewers think it's a bit "crude."

I don`t know, but I noticed that some people are more excited about puppets "blow-jobs" then blow-up "jobs" in Iraq...
Don`t ask me

What is the news over there by you on Iraq? Here they are so scared of being challenged by extremist viewers or aggravating advertisers or losing their priviledges at the White House that they just gloss over all the reports from Iraq until you would think that it was Disneyland over there.I personally see the re-organisation of Saddams original police force/the creation of militias that protect certain areas such as Kurdish Iraq/ the militarisation of the oil field and it's infrastructure. And a puppet govt. like we had in South Vietnam centered around Baghdad and guarded by U.S. Troops.I have no facts on this just a lifetime of observing how things work.

I don`t know much more, I rarely watch the news/TV. Just heard some rumours and read some reportages about people who drive the trucks from Turkey to Iraq, some of them from over here, good money. And there are some mercenaries who protect these convoys (and soldiers) for the money. They said - no good.

There you go; we don't hear anything like that over here. As far as our news goes except for small nieghborhoods in Baghdad the rest of Iraq is nice and safe. Now you hear of mercenaries hired to protect the supply convoys. I feel that is closer to the truth.Today they made a big deal of Rumsfeld paying a surprise visit to Iraq to tell them to speed up the drafting of a constitution and to refrain from organising the government around the Muslim Sharia rules. He had to be slipped in due to possible terrorism. Meanwhile the envoy from Iran walked proudly and openly into the headquarters of the provisional Govt.So we sneak in while they walk in. And you tell me we have control and all the people love us there.Unfreakin believable.
