Well, from about 270MB of photos, I've chosen this one. You are probably tired of half-naked girls on the beaches, sand, pines, sun, sunsets, sea, etc. It's St. Nicholas church from 12th century, half church, half citadel, near the Zadar, Dalmatia. About that time, coalition forces against the Moslems destroyed and looted this Christian city, on the 4th crusade... Another dark intrigue from the past, in Venetian production...

Say Damir; that's a pretty good picture. I actually wouldn't mind blowing it up to a larger poster size. The contrast between the stone projection of the building and the organic shape of the tree is a great shot. Actually the top of the tree sort of looks like a cloud. Why are there no other trees? So you took your family on an historical vacation? Boy I have to say that really looks medieval. Got anymore pics? It's amazing to see a building that's a thousand years old isn't it. What's the significance of this particular church?

It's early-romanic architecture, place where early Croatian kings were crowned. Archeological excavation in this area showed many 7-12st century objects, and some objects and necropolis of older cultures. Almost all ancient nations had those sacred places. In little town Nin, near this place there is even older church, about 9th century. Actually, the weather is not that nice that day, and we turned to history... It's not sharp picture (low light) - the one of the reasons for "analog feel" of digitally made photo...:-) Hey, if I have your E-mail, I'll send you a full resolution photo, promised...:-) There's another one, from just finished modern highway all the way to the seaside. No, I didn't drive and shoot, there's a traffic jam at the entrance of 5,7km long tunnel. There were lot of tourists!

Thats a pretty place. It's interesting for us here because even living in New York were some of the headstones in the cemeteries read back into the 17th century it's nothing like what you see. I would enjoy to see some more of this;Block2@optonline.net; thats my E-Mail. Thanks. So what else did you guys do?

Amazing--if not for the European-style road signs, that looks exactly like any number of areas in northern Arizona or New Mexico.

That is soooo cool! The history of places like that is very interesting to me. And half-naked girls on the beaches, sand, pines, sea and sunsets ain't half bad either!

Absolutely; I have always enjoyed waterside bars. Makes the Carribean look blase'.And the water will cushion the landing when you fall off the barstool.
