Subject: Another... :-)
Posted by Damir on Sun, 19 Mar 2006 19:00:35 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Huh...snow, mud, strain, even mines "suspected" area... But very large tower, historical important, but destroyed and less preserved.Anyway, a nice day...

Subject: Re: Another... :-)
Posted by colinhester on Mon, 20 Mar 2006 12:05:04 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I love the pictures. Please keep them coming. Why are there so many trees down? Ever find any old artifacts?

Subject: Re: Another... :-)
Posted by Damir on Mon, 20 Mar 2006 12:42:59 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Hi, thanks. Last time I was there (about 1990.) everything was different, and as I remember, better preserved. From the bushy forest you can`t actually see the tower, and it was difficult to find it. It was the "war zone" `91., and as I said "mines suspected area", and I came here not before yesterday, after about 16 years.But, lumberjacks were here recently...argh...at least, they "cleaned" the tower, but I suspect that field erosy will be worse than trees/bush.The name of the tower is "Stone-City", it belonged to various noble families during 15th-16th centuries, then Turks captured it. The Austrian and local army won them in 17th century, after the siege. There`re a few close hills, and cannons fire did it. It was a large castle, with multiple outside walls ("star" shaped), and inside tower.For centuries, few villages (5-6 km distance) built their houses with castle stones, pitty. This castle is mentioned many times in (local) history books like very important, and on important roads (?!). Today, it is far away from any road, deep in woods and on 612m hill - how the things changes?!There is a (small) hope for preservation of those old castles and old woods, this area is a "park of nature", somewhat less then "national park"...Artifacts - no, I didn`t search for it, there`re probably a few meters of soil over the real, old yard level.

Subject: Re: Another... :-)
Posted by Manualblock on Mon, 20 Mar 2006 13:17:21 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Damir; when the lumber companies come through do they disturb the stones at all? And what kind of wood do they cut?

Subject: Re: Another... :-)
Posted by Damir on Mon, 20 Mar 2006 17:27:01 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

As far as I saw it, they didn`t ruin the ruin, ha...Oak and beech-trees mostly.

Subject: Re: Another... :-)
Posted by Manualblock on Mon, 20 Mar 2006 20:19:42 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Ruin the Ruin; thats good! I posted a while ago you should only make a calender out of the twelve photo's; I already blew one up and am having it framed. Don't get mad for theft of IP!I like some of them; the colors and textures of stone and wood. We have all brick and granite here except for the brownstone homes uptown and in Brooklyn.
