So more forums there are,the less traffic each will get ...survival of the fittest :-)

Don't know if that logic works but I think that Full Rangeand AudioRoundtable have the best and most consistent members. Others tend to spread themselves too thin. I would liketo be able to keep up with Madisound and Parts ExpressForums too. But the only way to keep from going insane isto drop in occassionally or take specific questions intospecific discussions. I think certain of the forums tend to be what I wouldcall 'old school.' They concentrate on certain types ofdesign to the exclusion or derision of others. But the fact that AR and Full Range draw some of the same top talent is telling.

Yep, you're right, and I'm worried about it too. Survival of the fittest, the internet sites are falling like flies. Soon we'll be down to just two or three of them left.The End of the Internet the madisound forum moves so fast,they really should upgrade its code...and split it into different categories,but only perhaps 2 or 3Some make the mistake of splitting into every single forum catergory possible ,reducing traffic in each. Sometimes its good to see stuff ur not usualy interestd in !!!

I think I agree with you. But then again, splitting out a messageboard into different parts requires a lot of work or else you just start from scratch. So maybe it's better to start out with all the ones you think you'll need, even if it means a slow start for some at first.

I'm using an open source browser from Mozilla calledFirefox. RSS is an extension that is available free. Which reminds me, I have to go into newsgroups fromUsenet and find out which is a good starter book forLinux. Was down at the Barnes and Noble and found acouple that include Linux starter disks. I will needmy hand held on getting Linux going... sort of like here. :-)
