C:/WINDOWS/TEMP/a58c8a4a.exe - Trojan horse Downloader.Generic2.CTPI noticed the problem a few days ago, and AVG finally found it and deleted...But, I must admit that I`m not really good into porn and other "suspicious" sites...just the ART ?! And I didn`t got it by E-mail, and I use "Firefox" browser...huh.

Sounds like a program has changed browser settings, perhaps installing an add-on. Some of these things redirect all internet traffix coming into your system through their own code. That way they can easily track your activity, log keystrokes, send popups and redirect search results. Glad your virus detection program found the bug.

Jokes aside, me too - I thought that ART is somehow "hacked"...but many other things can be the reason - for example, those "songs lyrics" sites are full of pop-ups, etc.But, I`m not a computer expert, in another words - have no idea...

My realtime virus catcher was picking it up everytime I went to ART on Sunday. Deleted the file and it hasn't happened since that I know of. Ran my virus checker and Avast and neither has found it again. There was supposed to be a trojan out there that started the first part of the month and is compromising all sorts of websites on two week intervals.
