Hey; things are so bad now in the Mid-east; on the homefront; in South America and with the oil prices that it isn't even any fun complaining about it. So instead of belaboring the obvious regarding the incredible incompetence of this administration I have decided to demand an apology from all those who mocked us when we said what a terrible waste this war would be and how it wouldn't work out and how it was based on false premises. So who is going to be man enough to admit they had this whole thing wrong? Who will stand up and say I was wrong about Iraq and Afghanistan and I admit it. Boy; how much respect would you have for that guy! He would be a true hero to be so upfront and honest. Is anyone big enough to do it?

There hasn't been a refinery built in the US in thirty years. The Dems won't permit drilling in ANWR. Nuclear is at a standstill. Oh, and the Kennedys don't like windmills. Maybe that's got something to do with the price of fuel?

I agree with E that we need nuclear; it's silly not to pursue it at this point; the Euros have been using it for years. The gas hogs: what can one say, you see little tiny housewives in 5000 lb Tahoe vehicles like ants on an elephant. It's so ridiculous. What we need is a return to American democracy where we don't have a president who usurps the power of the legislative branch; writes his own laws and dictates whatever he wants to do without any input or consultation. That would be fine if we had a real intellectual up there but this yokel has screwed up so bad we may take forever to extricate the country from his mess.

"Boy; how much respect would you have for that guy! He would be a true hero to be so upfront and honest. Is anyone big enough to do it?" Hey, Mel Gibson publicly apologized for being totally drunk + speed driving, caught by police cursed and blamed Jews... Did anyone forgive him, especially Jews? I think that "true hero" would say - "yeah, I was drunk, I like speed driving when I'm into it, and I curse a lot... Yeah, police caught me, I'll pay my price - so what?"
