I remember that we have "Industrial sociology" on the college (well, sociology adapted to the working places, concrete and interesting stuff).And old professor told us that being right into some job/private problem/discussion isn`t enough, and even can be a dangerous thing. Most of the people most of the time aren`t lead by the facts, but their attitudes - and those attitudes "modulate" the facts, and "mix" them with emotions...

That is the point; I think both posts make; people really believe what they want to believe. Then they manufacture a whole schema to back it up. If you disagree they take it personally.Hillary asks Rumsfeld; "You have been wrong so many times so far in this war why should we believe anything you say now?""Gosh; I don't think I ever painted a rosy picture of the outcome of this conflict." Old Donny is like the husband caught in the bed with the babysitter. "I don't care what you saw; I didn't do it." They cal it" Cognitive Dissonance", when something is obvious and evident and right in front of you and you still deny it is there.

Thats right; if you repeat a lie often enough people will begin to believe it. I would like to see if people think the Iraq tri-partite government will grant autonomy to the Kurds or if there will be a serious war that drags in Turkey and Iran and the EU? Them Kurds can fight.
