
Subject: Male vocalists-- New Thread

Posted by lon on Wed, 22 Mar 2006 03:07:39 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

After just hearing a talk show about what being manly is which is not worth discussing (the author pointed to Rumsfeld as one of his good examples) the subject of male vocalists deserves as much attention as we've devoted to women. As contemporary performers, I know few of the Buster Poindexter variety of lounge singers that are about today. But I do have some favorite male vocalists each for different reasons. The best vocalist in Popular Music is Ray Benson of Asleep At The Wheel. I don't mean Country and Western popular music, I mean all popular music regardless of category. This is not to compare singers for their pyrotechnic ability, how loud or how long or even how high or how low they can sing. The best means quality of sound, resonance, delivery hey, what else is there? In concert Benson always says (and I can't do this with type on the screen) that what he does is Western music or "(little small voice 'country') and WESTERN music," shouting it out. The Ray Benson sound is not forced in any way. And the fact that I like Western Swing and swing music in general may have something to do with it. Especially good is Ray Benson on "House of Blue Lights" which I think was originally done by the Mills Brothers. Randy Travers, George Strait and the rest of the nasal crowd doing Country music are too embarrassing to listen to. So Ray Benson is the Popular Music vocalist with which to compare others. In jazz, there's a lot more to choose from. Like Georgie Fame amongst others.

Subject: Re: Male vocalists-- New Thread

Posted by Manualblock on Wed, 22 Mar 2006 16:49:43 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Ray Benson of Asleep At The Wheel. O'Kay. The best Pop singer; Male Vocalist Category? That's a stretch. I have most of AATW albums; nice stuff; I'd rather listen to the original Bill Monroe versions though; I find they get a little strident at times. The names you mention; I don't see them as country artists; they are pop singers who as you say sing in a nasal whine. The original reason for that sound from country artists is that they needed to be heard over the fiddles and consequently they projected their voices by tightening their pharyngeal muscles. Who's Georgie Fame? BTW; on AudioKarma the guys have started a CD collection trade thread. They all rip CD's composed of their favorite songs then trade them amongst each other in order to educate themselves about the music the members like. Man; is that a great idea or what?

Subject: Re: Male vocalists-- New Thread

Posted by lon on Wed, 22 Mar 2006 17:40:48 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I think I said Ray Benson is the best voice in pop music. He doesn't fall into the same category of the jazz singers and the riffs and runs they can do. I was pretty much introduced to Georgie Fame late in life from the jazz show. I maybe had heard the name on and off over time but never heard the work. He does a duet with Jon Hendricks on Hendricks' lyric of "Little Pony" from the Count Basie book that I never get tired of. Then there's "Cool Cat Blues" which sounds like a tune Mose Allison would do but I never heard it over 40 years from Mose Allison. Without p2p I would know nothing of that Little Pony track. There's one low note in the scant info I have on Georgie Fame and the Blue Flames: he put out some kind of recording with Van Morrison. Van Morrison is a bigger embarrassment to the music industry than Mick Jagger. Well maybe it's a tie. Yes the compilation thing is a great idea but why don't they torrent these collections as ISO's so everyone can enjoy them? Or pod cast?

Subject: Re: Male vocalists-- New Thread
Posted by Manualblock on Wed, 22 Mar 2006 17:49:35 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Probably too much work; they just want to share the things they like amongst themselves I think. It's a great way to learn new music though. I have to say; you, in musical terms I mean, definitely march to your own drum. That's great; you like what you like. But how can Van or Mick be embarrassments to music? What specifically would dictate that? I mean if we actually came up with an Embarrassment to Music thread it would be pretty long but I don't see it containing Mick Jagger. You may not like his voice but he never claimed to be Pavarotti. I like his early renderings of good blues tunes. He is one of the very few white guys who can do that well. Wild Horses? That's a great tune. Lots of them.

Subject: Re: Male vocalists-- New Thread
Posted by lon on Wed, 22 Mar 2006 18:38:13 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I took a peek at those lists you mentioned and how the comps are going around. I was trying to put a handle on this as far as, you know, taste goes and the first thing that came to mind was Ray Davies' tune called "Predictable." There is a lot of tunage in the world but I doubt that those have heard much of it. Looks like they are re-collecting things they heard on the AM radio. There was one reference on there to Maurice Jarre which was sort of interesting. I wonder if they know who Kinky Friedman is? Or Claude Thornhill or David Benford.

Subject: Re: Male vocalists-- New Thread
Posted by Manualblock on Wed, 22 Mar 2006 20:23:37 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I know what you mean; probably most of the music people listen to mirrors radio fare; that whole cognitive thing has entire libraries of books written about it. How exposure defines taste etc. But you have to sift the wheat from the chaff; and as you say you will find gems in the dust. Do you happen to know that French philosopher who has written extensively on music and popular culture? I would like to re-investigate his books but I can't remember his name. I like the whole concept that as an audiophile; the exposure to better music enables one to appreciate and define better equipment. They should know who Friedman is; he's running for office down there in Texas; local congressional representative I think. We should whip some David Peel and The Lower East Side on them.

Subject: Re: Male vocalists-- New Thread
Posted by lon on Wed, 22 Mar 2006 21:46:24 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Why does the name David Peel remind of some dj from Radio Caroline? I'm not knowing the band you mention. Friedman has a career as a well-known mystery writer these days...a long way from recording tunes like "Ride 'Em Jewboy". Far as cognition goes, I doubt that that has much to do with anything. Record companies put things in your ears and that's your life. If the world seems like a big place as far as music goes, just think of what I call second tier or more popularly 'alternative music.' There's a whole second tier of comparable quality stuff that never makes it beyond promotional college airplay. If I were to make one of these sampler cd's, the first thing I would put on it is Blue Plate Special with two of the recordings: "A Night Out" and "Message From Paul Drake". A night out begins with a guy with no plans entering a bar and seeing an old girl friend who is performing on a catwalk with "tatoos [that] spelled the names of the men left in the dirt." There's nothing like that in mundane pop music in imagery, style or lack of political correctness. The song does not have a happy ending either. "Message From Paul Drake" is about the detective from Perry Mason and how he is the actual unsung hero of the show. These are not materials I ever broadcast. I heard some college kids do it long after I left the studio. Then I went out and bought the stuff where I could find it. It's not the 'me-too' music that shows your connections with pop culture. But here again it's the fact that I remember these things that keeps them alive.

Blue Plate Special (deal of the day)

Subject: Re: Male vocalists-- New Thread
Posted by Manualblock on Thu, 23 Mar 2006 00:13:20 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Related items on e-bay= Gary Null; the health food guy?? O'Kay here's my CD Legend Of A mind The Western Lands Warm Beer, Cold Women The Wind Cries Mary Long Red Ballad Of Frankie Lee and Judas Priest Topanga Windows Forty-Four Blues Dust My Broom My Favorite ThingsOne For MY BabyDavid Peel was a street poet on the lower east side of Manhattan who used to throw together bands made up of whoever was around that day and record on the street.Cognition is how we percieve stimulus.Whats your CD?

Subject: Re: Male vocalists-- New Thread
Posted by lon on Thu, 23 Mar 2006 03:58:50 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Wasn't Dave peel, it was John Peel.Look what I found: a history of ofshore radio with sound clips too: [see link]Far as a cd goes, does it have to be things I have that canactually be recorded or just fantasy stuff I'd do like"Johnny Pissoff meets The Red Angel"?OK, I'll do a few that I can actually whip out (as Zappawould say)The above 2 by blue Plate special (I'm surprised you didn'torder that item from the link-- it's 75 cents plus shipping)Switch Blade 327 -BSOBoplicity (Les Double Six A' Paris (first album)Born To Run (not by the Boss, by Big Daddy)All About Rosie (George Russell an arranger for Stan Kenton)Time And Love (title track- Jackie Cain and Roy Kral)Skokian-- Brave Combo -- No Sad FacesCool Cat Blues-- Georgie Fame... I'm on the spot here... have to pick a female vocalistor 2 yet... Sigh No More Ladies (from the Shakespeare collection of Cleo Laine and John Dankworth)Let's Do It -- Joan Jett from the Tank Girl SoundtrackMiss Thing -- Lavay Smith (had the priviledge of seeing Smith live)The Hut Sut Song -- Five By Design (even beats out some Hilo's)Lady In Red -- The HiLosOne cd worth of stuff is really hard to do. There's no ska in there either.No Dave Alvin... it just goes on. But the track that hasto go in there is "Death In The Morning" from "UnSung Stories"and kind of good to put it last as well.
Offshore radio

Subject: Re: Male vocalists-- New Thread
Posted by Manualblock on Thu, 23 Mar 2006 15:05:01 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Thats a nice link; interesting. There used to be a pirate radio guy in Levittown who popped in and out of the airwaves. It was pretty funny because we would actually see guys in cars triangulating trying to find his location. The John Peel you have there is a different guy. David Peel was an itinerant musician and most definately not British. I have the Lavay Album Miss Thing bought on your recommendation. It's very good; she has a nice tone and a very natural voice that somehow reminds me of Bette Midler's voice. The band is real tight and not redundant. I need to spend more time with that group.I'd like to try your Gearge Russell; I am a Stan Kenton Fan but it is hard to find good recordings that are not either fillers or poorly recorded.I whipped up my CD off the top of my head. No thought just what I would have liked to hear at that moment. Thats why I didn't bother to list particulars. Jackie And Roy; I like their presentation; whats good for an introduction?I just picked up an Erskine Hawkins disc; nice sharp arrangements.Let me funnel through the link. I still don't see the Georgie Fame. And Of course Dave Alvin is a favorite; Abilene. Good Story songs; like Townes Van Zandt. Hugely under-rated. Oh; for .75c you're right, I am just lazy. Was it you who provided the link for Steve Post archived radio shows?

Subject: Re: Male vocalists-- New Thread
Posted by lon on Thu, 23 Mar 2006 19:10:02 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Yes that's some quick radio stuff I found. The master, far as I know of archiving radio performers is Tom Konard at aircheckfactory.com. he's been doing that since 1976. Since I don't follow pop music, I really couldn't make any comment on the titles you posted, except for recognizing some and not others. There's not the really good Jackie and Roy around and hasn't been for many years. George Russell was a guy Bob was playing on the jazz show and it really stood out. Bill Holman does that favorite track on "What's New?" but I've said quite a bit about that before. Other bands are ones like the Vanguard Jazz orchestra from the Village Vanguard. Bob Brookmeyer has become a composition teacher and he has done some things for that band since Thad Jones and Mel Lewis have passed. I also like the newer bands of John Fedchock, Bob Minzer and Rob McConnell. Maynard Ferguson is still touring to high schools and small venues. A rare find of his called "The Waltz" I managed to find in the statewide library collection. That goes through my head on a daily basis for _years_. We've covered the swing and pop scene but we haven't touched the classical or ska or folk scene hardly at all.

Subject: Re: Male vocalists-- New Thread
Posted by Manualblock on Fri, 24 Mar 2006 02:26:04 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Well; my definition of pop would include much of the lyrical song interpretations of many of the working jazz or semi-pop jazz people like Brookmeyer and Ferguson; certainly Jackie and Roy. Thad Jones and Mel Lewis cut sides for many pop inspired large band efforts. That's kind of how I file the high school auditorium jazz circuit. Lionel Hampton and even say Doc Severinson; like what Buddy Riche's orchestra's used to do. You can see if you look at liner notes many of the names in those bigger bands listed on your typical Andy Williams type recordings. Now the jive and swing stuff you like is a little more esoteric regarding radio play and finds a niche somewhere in every large city airway listing of shows. There's one modeled after symphony sid on the college station locally. The real big bands like Les Brown; Artie Shaw; Ellington such as what I listen to I see as a totally different genre than what you describe as such. I see your taste as more of a very select specific style that maybe can be lumped in with some types of large group music but is not a defining style. At least those you mention so far. I mean is Lawrence Welk or Guy Lombardo considered big band or swing? But back to basics. Ska to me is a name; does it originate with early Bahamian Folk Tunes? I say the influence of Portugese and African rythm might describe where the dividing line that eventually created ska as I know it. Unless you mean contemporary Island and English retro-new wave derivatives. Is that where you see it? My most played world sounds come from African new beat styles; Obu Addy and Tobando; but Fela Anikapulto Kuti is on the deck about every other day; he's amazing. I love all that township jive going back to King Sunny Ade'.Where is that on the radio? And when you say Folk; is that commercial folk or roots music of various areas and eras?

Subject: Re: Male vocalists-- New Thread
Posted by lon on Fri, 24 Mar 2006 04:51:18 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I like the New York "rudie" ska-- at least that's what mylimited familiarity is with it.Far as band music, you are right. Back in the 70's I experienced'college band' jazz not really knowing what it was at the time.College Band was supported in the professional community by the likes of Stan Kenton as a way to raise a new generation inthe music. The college style then-- the sort written byHolman, Russell, Dee Barton and the whole school of music thatcame out of the North Texas State Jazz Lab Band and it's imitatorswas a specific movement that took hold in the 70's according theextensive liner notes on a collected cd set of Holman and Russoarrangements for the Kenton orchestra.It was classically influenced rather than being dance music,though Ellington-- once you get past chestnuts like Take The A Trainfind the concert Ellington, who even wrote a piece on the spot for the University Of Wisconsin. Ellington was prodigious and hisserious work of religious, Far East, and other themed suites. These are concert works. Artie Shaw moved into this area as well I believe.Far as Guy Lombardo and Lawrence Welk, Garrison Keillor has taken overthat slot on the radio for the next generation of old farts who wantto slide into some nice _soft_ entertainment.

Subject: Re: Male vocalists-- New Thread
Posted by Manualblock on Fri, 24 Mar 2006 15:31:44 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Actually my point revolved around what a definition of pop music might be. That is where the idea of jazz guys playing the HS/College circuit prompted me to reflect on exactly what these definitions mean.To me pop music is music that is arranged from existing scores or written for some purpose other than artistic expression.For instance would you call Madonna pop music? I don't know; I don't listen to it, but it is apparent to me that she in her own way was a creator.Now back when; Lawrence Welk and Guy Lombardo created dance bands that were specifically designed to have less intensiveness and more accesibility for the purpose of dancing where the music does not intrude on that purpose. So does that make them innovators? Artists?Of course they are less than stellar in those departments; but both leaders hired only the best session guys around. Atie Shaw left the music business with a bad feeling; he felt it had become too commercial and said so in print then refused to play. But he was one good clarinet player.So if an artist is obscure and exists in a niche genre'; but can play well; then what are they?I used to see a lot of the Ska bands at a place called the Funky Fish and also at Downtown. It is really good music to hear live; but it doesn't travel well into the home venue. On record it sounds flat. Really is a live art. The Specials come to mind; I like their sound.

Subject: Re: Male vocalists-- New Thread
Posted by lon on Fri, 24 Mar 2006 18:43:47 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

And Madness. Plus I had a really good live band experience at a punk ska event featuring a band called "Less Than Jake" and some others. These days I go out very little. There quite frankly is nothing to go out for. But my first ska experience was from a radio show that was on at Sunday at 12 noon and it sounded great. Good for cleaning house. _That_ program introduced me to the retro swing movement of the late 90's. I would have been unaware of the new swing at all otherwise. Ska for me is the 'missing link' in the pop music chain. It should have a place in club performance everywhere. But it's only in big cities where it has had any presence at all. I am old. I am an old fart. There is no place for me in clubs even if I drank or smoked. It's just alien. But still, I would go out to see a ska band in performance again.

Subject: Re: Male vocalists-- New Thread
Posted by Manualblock on Fri, 24 Mar 2006 20:06:37 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Yes we have all peaked and faded. Luckily there is one nice concert venue left available here that kinda caters to an older crowd. The last band I saw there was Dan Hick's and The Hot Licks. The Hot Licks have cooled down some but still funky and Dan is a comical fellow. Before that was Hugh Masekela; which BTW was really a phenomenal show. We have tickets for The Roches next. Now how do you mean ska as the missing link? To what; reggae? Ska came from Skiffle Bands doing acoustic island influenced music; no?

Subject: Re: Male vocalists-- New Thread
Posted by lon on Fri, 24 Mar 2006 20:37:59 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

For me the _whole problem_ is shows geared toward an _older crowd_. I don't think I'm in the older crowd category nor do I have any interest (I've found) with most acts that blow through the local performing arts centers and refurbished opera houses. Missing link might have been the wrong phrase for ska. There's a local ska festival in the spring at the swanky small college here, lovingly called "the Harvard of the Midwest". So there has been some exposure to the music. I think it is _the_ club music, but it never caught on with the club scene. I think I know the reason too and it's one of those things that is speculation but based on knockings and things I've heard about the tavern business. Bars and clubs want to sell as much booze as they can. Certain types of music are distractions from that activity if the music (swing and ska in particular) encourages a lot of dancing and less alcohol consumption. This argument went around during the swing movement and I'm pretty sure it applies to the ska movement and scene as well. Music that is overly _slow_ and _loud_ (country, some techno, the average white vocalist like Madonna or Mariah Carey and bar bands of all stripes) is manufactured toward the end of getting as much alc into people as possible. The reason given for not booking bands that have a lot of audience attention is just this: the saloonkeepers have rejected them for reasons of profit. Hearing those over-emotionalized, whining, fake attempts at gospel sound with that high pitched squeal you think will never end is bad enough in the supermarket. In the club, the same stuff is used as that which an antidote or pain killer is needed. That's what the bar tender is there for. In the larger and more diverse markets I suppose these musics can find a venue. But there is a definite lock down of the types of acts booked or music styles given in all those clubs now owned by Clear Channel and other cretins. It is a manipulation of the patrons in these places that is so offensive to me but not really recognized by the average club-goer. Maybe missing in action is a better way to describe the lack of variety such as ska in the club scene. There was or should have been an entry point for ska from the days of the Specials, Selecter, Madness and the ska variations that have come up since.

Subject: Re: Male vocalists-- New Thread
Posted by Manualblock on Sat, 25 Mar 2006 23:48:48 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Madonna or Mariah Carey selling alcohol. Well two problems I can see with that proposition. One; women don't drink. (Please don't tell me about that girl who keeps up with all the guys; it's rare and far between.) and that's who goes to Madonna Concerts. Second young people don't drink. Sure they buy a couple beers or a few shots but in terms of a bar making money off the liquor; that don't do it. Slow and loud? You mean like pretty much all of the current alternative rock acts? See; when I say older; the older people I mean are older. If they are in a bar it's because they are doing deals or getting really loaded. Not to see music. If there was a swing band playing in a club around here the average age of the patrons would probably reach 50 or better. As far as dancing that's mostly in the latino bars. Here there really isn't much in the way of live music anymore in clubs or anywhere else. If you want to see live you need to go into Manhattan mostly. What people here do in bars is meet other people. The music that sells drinks is the best of what's on the radio now in the jukebox or through the DJ. Bars sell lots of alcohol when there are a lot of girls mixed in with the guys and the average age is around 30; that's the peak. The young ones really don't drink as much as you would think even though it looks it. It's the twenty four to forty crowd that drinks enough to keep a profitable bar going. And they go where the other people like them are. Or it's the local bar in a low tax; low rent location with a good crowd of regulars that show regularly. That's the bars with names like the Stop Inn or The Barnacle that last forever. As far as country music being loud and slow; can you be more specific?
