Well, I stopped by an estate sale on the way home and came home with a Realistic STA-11 receiver and a pair of Nova-10 speakers. The STA-11 has almost identical specs to the STA-111 (which you can see pics of on the net), but has an analog tuner dial instead of the digital display. I like the old analog tuner dials better anyway--they just look cool. Puts out 30wpc and has a phono section as well. The speakers are a sealed cabinet type with an 8" woofer, 8" radiator, and a little 2" tweeter with a small dome on it. They have the lattice grills on them as well. The speakers and receiver were owned by a little old lady who bought them new (they even came with the manuals. I doubt the speakers are even broke in! There isn't so much as a smudge on the real wood veneered cabinets or lattice, and the receiver looks like it just came off the shelf. Hooked the pair up and the speakers sound pretty damn good. They do vocals and anything with mids very, very well. But they are only 90dB efficient, but they might work well with a flea powered amp as they really aren't meant to be pushed hard.

For $30 I just couldn't pass it up. I have no idea what I'll do with them yet, but even the wifey thought the pieces looked very nice.

Here's some screen shots of the 1982 catalog with them in there. The Nova 10's were new for 1981. I don't know about the STA-11.

Great score Shane,

I think that you have a stereo that was manufactured by Pioneer during that era of Realistic offerings. But, don't quote me on that.

I have a few Harmon Kardon low wattage recievers from the early 1970's that sound great, one that puts out 18 watts and the other 25 watts.

These solid-state recievers will drive any reasonably efficient speaker to their physical limits without breaking a sweat.

Have fun with the score, new toys.

And tell your wife your problem is much better than chasing girls and hanging out in bars, or other alternatives distractions. That is what I tell Diana anyhow.
