I'm an old Ozzy fan from back in the days he was with Black Sabbath. I still love to listen to his stuff even now. He's getting to be an old rocker like me now though. I hate to see the shape he has gotten into physically but I still love to listen to his stuff. Bark At The Moon is one of my favorites.

Yeah, you gotta love Ozzie. But that reality show of his bites.

Isn't that the truth. I just didn't watch after the first show. I couldn't stand seeing him in the shape he was. I know it was the drugs to some extent but does he have Parkinsons disease or something like that?

My brother loved his music back in the day so I was forced to listen to it. I have to admit I didn't care for him at all.

He did it to himself, with all the drugs he took- it's a wonder he is still alive.

Yeah, he did. But what one of us hasn't eaten too much, drank too much or smoked too much tobacco? We all have our bad habits and they will come back to bite us in the behind eventually.

You know, I didn't start listening to Ozzy until about 10 years ago. I guess when I was younger I just didn't like his kind of music but once I listened to his music, I mean really listened to it, I started liking it. I don't really care what shape he is in just as long as he can still make good music.

I've been listening to Ozzy since day one of his solo career. I know many are Black Sabbath fans, but I just never could get into them much. I think I like them better with Dio singing. My favorite Ozzy song though is Diary of a Madman. That intro guitar riff is just piercingly good.

I like watching the "Dreamer" video. I don't know why but it strikes a cord in me. I like the song but the video is really great. Of course I like just about all of his stuff.
